NICE JOB: Huntington Beach's Chanda Gunn, right, meets Ducks captain Scott Niedermayer after she was honored at a recent game for winning an Olympic bronze medal.

Gunn learns about post-Olympic life

ANAHEIM • The same night Mighty Ducks goaltender Jean-Sebastien Giguere was rumored to be on the NHL trading block, the most victorious American goalie in the world of late walked into the Arrowhead Pond of Anaheim.

In blue jeans, sneakers, a T-shirt and a surfer-style green zip-up sweater. With an Olympic bronze medal loose in the bottom of a black tote bag.

"A goalie? Me? Tonight?" Chanda Gunn responded with surprise to a passerby's request before last week's San Jose Sharks-Ducks game.

Barely three days back from the Winter Games in Turin, Italy — where she helped USA Hockey defeat Finland, 4-0, for the bronze medal — she said, "I haven't even skated since the last game (Feb. 20)."

No netminding was necessary. But the team gave the Huntington Beach-born goalie a Ducks sweater bearing "Gunn" and her number "30."

Donning her new uniform, with her medal swinging from the red ribbon around her neck, Gunn performed the ceremonial puck drop at center ice between the sticks of Sharks center Patrick Marleau and Ducks defenseman Scott Niedermayer, who brushed at the puck as the crowd applauded.

Then Gunn rushed to the rollaway carpet strips into the unseen parts of the arena and re-appeared in her Section 211 seats beside her 22-year-old brother, Jacob — a center on the UCLA club hockey team.

"He's the best player on his team," she said of her brother, who cheered her from the stands through all 14 saves in her final shutout.

Chanda and Jacob later visited with Ducks owners Henry and Susan Samuelli in their luxury suite. Then they did color commentary for Fox Sports in the second period from the upper tier of the stadium.

After the 5-4 Ducks victory, Chanda had plans to visit the locker room and meet Giguere — "I always cheer for him," Gunn said — and Ducks forward Teemu Selanne, who lost three teeth playing for silver medalist Finland.

"I heard he was in the Finland (women's) locker room before the bronze-medal game telling them they could beat us," she said. "I won't tell him I know that. You can't find a nicer guy or a role model."

As many Olympians return home after their four-year, single-minded athletic pursuits of the podium, many reap the rewards of their success and continue to meet demands of new-found fame.

Local interest keeps Gunn running around Southern California to meet interview and appearance requests. The Ducks wanted to embrace Gunn in all her post-Games glory. An East Coast radio show, which forced her to stay awake from 3:45-7 a.m. on Wednesday, sought to catch up with Gunn, who attends Northeastern University in Boston.

"It has only been three days, and I haven't even finished unpacking," said Gunn, who was last home in December.

"It has been a long time since I had a permanent address. I've been on the road living in hotels and athletic villages with a credential around my neck. You need one to go to the bathroom. Today it was nice just to go to the mall."

Olympians talk of the dropoff — the emotional, mental and physical cliff from which they plummet in the months after The Games. That lifestyle change for Gunn and her hockey teammates makes homecoming bittersweet.

"There is a huge letdown," she said. "Mostly I feel separation from my team, 20 women I spent a year with."

Their days were planned. Their food, lodging, clothes and travel provided. They had few choices beyond hockey. That's life, Olympic-style.

Today her hockey equipment sits zipped in a bag in the garage. Helmet, skates, jersey, pads, sticks — it's all there, untouched since it came out of the car from the airport.

"Maybe I'll skate a couple days before Calgary," she said, referring to USA Hockey's weeklong contest against Canada beginning March 21.

Workouts, which were twice a day and six hours, are now 45 minutes on a gym machine.

Her teammates, whom she left in tearful embraces in the Boston airport after their flight from Milan, are still a daily presence. Only now the contact comes in electronic text that she checks five times a day.

"We're going on a team vacation to Puerto Rico in two weeks," she said excitedly. "People are out getting swimsuits and pedicures."

Some teammates have returned to coaching college hockey. A few have gone back to school, which Gunn will do in a few months, since she needs one credit to get her diploma and graduate in June.

Gunn, who has epilepsy, goes to New York City next week to speak in support of the Epilepsy Development Therapy Project. After playing in Calgary, she plans to return to Washington, D.C. to help kids lobbying for a cure.

Then it's off to Minnesota in April to work with a girls' hockey program. This is the start of Year One in another Olympic cycle.

Whether she will try to compete in 2010, Gunn has yet to decide.

"One year at a time," the bronze medalist said. "Just getting back in real life is challenge enough for now."
